So many wonderful things are going on in the art room. We have been making projects that burst with color in hopes it will inspire the warmer weather to come faster!

Kindergarteners created Truffula trees and learned about how Dr. Suess created his imaginary worlds based on things he saw and experienced every day. They created a collage of their own based on the book The Lorax.

First graders worked hard to learn how to weave paper. The over and under pattern was a challenge they accepted with determination. Another art concept they discovered was the difference between positive and negative space, by creating a heart window for their weaving. Then, they practiced their sewing skills above and below their heart.

Third graders leaned about artist Jean-Michel Basquiat in their classroom, during their non-fiction unit. In art, students unpacked Basquiat's symbols and discovered what inspired him. Then they created one of their own pieces, loosely based on his style.
