Kindergarteners learned the difference between self-portraits and portraits. They drew themselves in the rain under an umbrella while later in the week they designed some nesting doll portraits of their family members using shapes, lines and color.

Third graders learned about artist George Rodrigue, who was famous for painting the same subject matter for over 20 years of his career. The inspiration for his artwork came from a studio dog named Lucy and the French legend of the Lupe Garu, which is about a werewolf/dog like creature. Students integrated complimentary colors in their own version George Rodrigue's famous Blue Dog paintings.

Fourth graders explored ways to fold paper and created colorful radial designs by repeating and arranging the folds in colorful patterns.
