May 2019

There are many great things happening in the art this month. Students have been creating projects that reflect the spring season as well as their own personal style.

Kindergarteners studied their own stuffed animals. In the process they discovered what kinds of shapes can be combined to help drawings look like their prized possessions.

First graders combined their knowledge about math and art to make shape flowers. The first-grade teacher and I designed a lesson where they could apply their thinking about how shapes can fit inside other shapes. The final results were awesome.

Fifth graders have been learning a lot about how art has meaning. Below is a project where they had to create a black and white self-portrait with a pair of glasses. Inside the glasses they needed to draw a place they loved to be.

There have also been several class community art projects being created for PTA events coming up. Check out some of the fun things students helped create.
